

Letter to the editor Bega District News, Prue Acton 19 March 2010

Once hundreds of thousands of koalas lived in the Bega Valley – hunting, clearing and logging has all but wiped them out.

Yet despite a known population of only fifty or less in Mumbulla, the NSW government is sending in the loggers.

Koalas need space; they need territory to survive.

Experts say logging will spell regional extinction.

So when do logging contracts, under flawed Regional Forest Agreements, override common sense?

Premier Keneally must step in and stop the rot or she can kiss koalas of the southeast goodbye.
